

IN THE SAME COUNTRY.

Jude's homes forgot the day.
His living strain, its sore quest,
And soft on tollers' eyelids lay
The midnight sacrament of rest.
They knew not, dreamed not while they slept—
What heaven was all awake to see—
That by the gate Bethlehem wept
A houseless bride of Galilee.

Unblessed was slumber's piteous boon
To Roman lord and Hebrew priest,
And rank or drowled in drunken swoon
King Herod at his vassal feast.
But on that night at borrowed span
Of earth defiled by hoof and shoe
Became the birth-day of a Man
Like none Jude's annals knew.

Her sentries paced Antonia's hold,
Her thieves in Jordan wade lay low,
Her misers nodded o'er their gold
In Salem and in Jericho.
And on Ephraim's hillside green
Her shepherds heard the angels sing
In starlight o'er the manger scene
Where Mary hushed their infant King.

O light in darkness, life in death!
In that same land and moment grew
The foulest wrong, the holiest faith.
The love that saved, the crime that slew.
By court and palace misbelieved,
Jude's glory, hope and trust
Mary of Nazareth received,
And cradled in Jude's dust.

And since that night has laid uncurled
Its serpent length, and love its wings
In the wide Jewry of the world,
But sweet from Christian bellies rings
The truth that love at last shall reign
Victory of Man, the noblest of Whom the gift-mother bore in pain
Beneath the stars of Palestine.

The Provo Democrat recently received the following special from Ann Arbor,
Michigan:
Ann Arbor, Mich.—Miss Annie Pike, of Provo, Utah, a student in the literary department of the University of Michigan, has a poem in the woman's edition of the Michigan Daily News of this date, entitled, "A Christmas Prayer." Miss Pike is making a specialty of literature and elocution and incidentally is becoming known as a poet and writer of skill and promise.
The following is the poem referred to:

"A CHRISTMAS PRAYER."

"God of the great white mountains,
God of the deep, vast sea,
God of the swinging universe,
God of this little me!
How can I look at the still, white stars,
How can I think of the sea,
And the mountains, O Lord, and wonder
What thou wouldst have of me?"

"Thou who didst give me Christ,
Hear Thou my prayer tonight,
I am so willing, so frail,
Give me, O Lord, the light;
Mountains and sea and universe
Touched to one harmony,
Thine, not, but follow Thy wondrous plan."
What wouldst Thou have of me?
"Thou who didst bend my life
Into one purposeful thought,
Let me but give to the world
Out of my little lot;
Christ gave His life, and I, O Lord!
Facing Eternity,
Pray for the courage and strength to give
All Thou wouldst have of me!"

NOTES.
Why is it that, despite the many articles or brochures descriptive of Madame Recamier's life and character her remarkable beauty even to old age, in unique salon, where noble and citizen freely and gracefully mingled and touched elbows as they did nowhere else—why is it that the character of the woman herself has not been popularly understood at its true worth? There is a tendency in the general conception of her to place her "a little lower than the angels," whereas, in fact, she was a veritable angel of goodness and virtue according to those who knew her best. Her friend the Duchess d'Angoulême, said of her: "One cannot expect to find in future times a woman like her—a woman whose friendship has been courted by the most remarkable persons of the age; to those who had happiness to know and to appreciate her she was a peculiar and gifted being, formed by nature as a perfect model in one of her most beneficent moods." The "Short Story" have just issued a biography ever published of this unique woman, under the title, "Madame Recamier and her Friends."

A correspondent has written to the Colorado Springs Gazette to say that he believes he has identified in real life the character of Beauty Steele in "The Right of Way." The real Steele, he avers, was a Montreal lawyer of his own acquaintance, who was handsome, accomplished, eloquent, and elegant, who figured in the murder trial very much as the fictitious Steele does in the book, and saved a murderer from the gallows by sheer force of his personal fascination in the court-room. In both the real and the imagined case the victorious lawyer contemptuously rejected the thanks of his guilty client, after cutting other striking resemblances between facts and fiction, the writer in the Gazette continues: "It is to be hoped when Mr. Parker visits this country he will make a clean breast of it and tell us who Beauty Steele was in fact, and how the character in recent fiction has the qualities that draw on the emotions as Charles Steele does."

"Desperate Remedies" is known as Mr. Thomas Hardy's first book, and yet in the list of his works given in "Who's Who" there occurs first "A Short Story." This has puzzled quite a few bibliographers, but the fact is that this "Short Story" though written before "Desperate Remedies" was never published. The title we may say was "The poor Man and the Lady," and part of it was afterwards incorporated in another tale. The title of Mr. Hardy's second volume of Wessex poems, announced as "Poems of Feeling, Dream and Deed," was changed by him at the last moment to "Poems of the Past and the Present." The volume has just made its appearance. In connection with this it may be interesting to observe that if the young Hardy had had his way with the publishers his first book would have been poetry, but publishers would have none of it.

People who know W. E. Henley, and are cognizant of his relations with Robert Louis Stevenson—the early recognition by Henley of Stevenson's genius are inclined to doubt that Mr. Henley has been correctly quoted in the British papers which ascribe to him remarks of somewhat ungenerous cavilling at the idealistic treatment Mr. Stevenson has given Stevenson in his recent "Life." Mr. Henley believes doubtless that Stevenson himself would have forbidden any attempt to place him near or to perfection than he was, so utterly honest and free from affectation was his rich humanity. Henley's own connection with Stevenson—one of the finest characterizations in verse ever penned—is so fairly representative of the poet's mental attitude towards his friend, that it need only be read to perceive Henley's appreciation of the man. Mr. Henley, by the way, has just published another book of poems, "Hawthorn and Lavender," issued by the Harpers.

The advent of Edwin Markham's new book, "Lincoln, and Other Poems," recalls the illustrious career of "The Man with the Hoe." In the beginning it was hailed as the noble "Psalm of Labor." Then it was denounced as a travesty of the toiler; then men like Professors William James and Edward Dowden declared that it was full of hope and humanity. Next the critics spent themselves in showing forth its black pessimism. The late Col. P. Huntington, of railroad fame, offered $700 for a poem refuting the Markham heresies. The prize winner was forthcoming, but it was declared more pessimistic than the poem whose effects it sought to remedy. And still "The Man with the Hoe" has lived. However, Mr. Markham's second book of verse will probably be more satisfying to the early faultfinders. Along with sympathy for all forms of honest activity, it sounds a distinct optimistic note, which will be highly gratifying even to the poet's admirers.

"The other day a prospectus of one of the Harper periodicals was sent, by the way of a new clerk in their mailing department, to the wrong name on a list of patrons of the house. The name changed to be that of a world-famous statesman who has been dead for many years. The prospectus was returned to the Harpers with the following endorsement:

"In Heaven, _____, 1901.
Gentlemen: As your publications are not permitted to circulate here, I believe it would be useless for me to subscribe for them. Your respectfully (and here followed the name of the famous statesman.) The endorsed circular was carefully filed for future reference.

There is a note of alarm in Mr. Howells' recent review of Onoto Watanna's charming book, "A Japanese Nightingale," which our American girls would do well to heed. "Nothing but the irresistible charm of the American girl could, I should think," ventures Mr. Howells, "keep the young man who reads Miss Watanna's book from going off and marrying a Japanese girl." Yuki, the heroine of the tale, he describes as "of a surpassing loveliness," and of the story itself he says, "there is a quite indescribable freshness in the art of this pretty novella, which is like no other art except in the simplicity which is native to the best art everywhere."

BOOKS.

"Turquoise and Iron" is the title of a volume of poems by Lionel Joseph, a young California writer, whose first published volume "The Lion at the Well," received favorable notice from the reviewers. The work is unconventional and for the most part poetic, but in many of the poems, especially the longer ones, the diction is obscure, though the words and rhythm are faultless. There are a number of sonnets in the volume that lack this fault and give the reader pleasure with their genuine poetry. While the themes throughout the book are original, there are echoes to most of them a tincture of Poe's muse, in motive and construction, that asserts itself constantly against the reader's underlying impression of originality. The book is neatly bound and is published by A. M. Robertson Co., San Francisco.

"Italian Sculpture of the Renaissance" is the title of a book by Lucy J. Freeman, M. A., which the Macmillan company has recently published. The author has endeavored to arouse the sense of imagination rather than the literary. She has tried to treat her subject from the aesthetic, not from the anecdotal or the archaeological or the ethical standpoint. The principal works of the masters are described, and the emotional and other associative values which are dependent upon our sensations are noted. Each description is accompanied with an illustration.

Horse sense.

"Any fool can take a horse to water, but it takes a wise man to make him drink," says the proverb. The horse eats when hungry and drinks when thirsty. A man eats and drinks by the clock, without regard to the needs of his nature. Because our careless eating and drinking "stomach trouble" is one of the commonest of diseases. Sour and bitter risings, belchings, unnatural fullness after eating, dizziness, headache, and many other symptoms mark the beginning and progress of disease of the stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures through the stomach all chronic diseases of other organs which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach, and it strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, cures obstinate cough and weak lungs.

"I was taken with Grippe, which resulted in heart and stomach trouble," writes Mr. T. E. Caudill, Montreal, Allegheny Co., N. C. "I was unable to do anything a good part of the time. I wrote to Dr. Pierce about my condition. He advised me to take his Golden Medical Discovery, which I did. Before I had finished the second bottle I began to feel better. I have used nearly five bottles. I feel thankful to God for the benefit I have received from Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I can highly recommend it to all persons as a good and safe medicine."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy.

For travelers and for students an appendix is added containing much concentrated information, also a bibliography and a list of the titles and whereabouts of the more important sculptors.

New Education Readers—Book IV, by A. J. Demarest, superintendent of public instruction, Hoboken, N. J., and William M. Van Sickle, superintendent of schools North Bergen, comprises the New Education Readers and is intended for the use of pupils in the third year. It continues the application of the principles developed in the former books. Through a wide range of subjects, the pupils are introduced to good literature and led into right habits of thinking and reading. Lists of the more difficult words are given at the end of the book, where they will serve for drill work in enunciation, pronunciation, and spelling. The reading matter in the book is of a higher grade than is usual in third readers, owing to the extensive vocabulary developed by this new method, which enables the pupil to do in three years the work formerly requiring four. The book is handsomely illustrated, and bound in a very attractive cover.

Ouida is said to have a curious method of writing. She makes the draft of a story, writing perhaps forty thousand words, and then she revises it, making it a complete story, needing only technical corrections. It is sent to a typewriter, who transcribes it upon paper of foolscap.

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS.

ALICE CLAWSON.

Many old residents will recognize in this picture the features of Mrs. Alice Young Clawson. She was the daughter of President Brigham Young and Mary Ann Angell Young, the wife of Bishop H. B. Clawson and the mother of the artist J. W. Clawson. She was one of the most beautiful and gifted of President Young's daughters, had strong aspirations for the stage and frequently appeared with the old Deseret stock company. She was also an accomplished equestrienne. She died in St. George when she was about 36 years of age. Her worthiness in his book, referred to her as a woman of unusual accomplishments.

cap size, with three-quarters of the page left blank. The novelist goes over in a big robe for hours," says it. V. Bliley, author of "The Anvil," the complete novel in a recent number of Lippincott's Magazine, "I pass my afternoons taking notes on the streets, searching everything—the fashionable, the gay, the sad, the odd, the disreputable, the commonplace, the significant—a bizarre life, but one that sets away the vulgar from the eye of our mind."

When Anthony Trollope pictured Anty Scott as "coming whirling up the street with a clear in his mouth," he not only proved that he had never made personal experiment of the double feat of smoking a cigar and whistling at a time, but he was unconsciously following in the steps of still greater writers who make their heroes do amazing and impossible things.

Those who remember their Robinson Crusoe may recall a most wonderful feat of this hero of childhood. When he decided to abandon the wreck and try to swim ashore, he took the precaution to remove all his clothes, and yet by some strange magic, of which makes secret has been lost, the hero was enabled by smaller means—fiction, travel, biographical and descriptive—have appeared for the Christmas season, as to letter press, binding and general make-up, in truly artistic and durable form, it seems as if every standard test

According to Mrs. Mary Penelosa, "Truth Dexter" was written in collaboration by her divorced husband, Ernest Penelosa, and May Ledyard Scott, of Mobile, Ala.

A. C. McClurg & Co. announce for early publication a life of Herbert Spencer, by Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford University. If the present season is prolific in books, for the existence of which we find to find other than a momentary excuse, it is also signalized by being one of the most successful standard works. New edition honors are being showered on Dickens, "Thackeray," Scott, George Eliot and even upon Fielding, Smollett and Richardson. Within the last month we have had no less than four new editions of Shakespeare, while well known biographical and descriptive—have appeared for the Christmas season, as to letter press, binding and general make-up, in truly artistic and durable form, it seems as if every standard test which would at all lend itself to the art of the illustrator, the printer and the bookbinder has been brought forth in an abundance and luxuriousness never before equaled.

The lectures delivered at the University of Chicago by Maxine Kovalevsky, some time professor of public law at the University of Moscow, are about to appear in book form. The subject treated of is "Russian Political Institutions." Russia is at all times interesting, but just now it is particularly so. The Russian institution adds all comparisons with the roots of other civilizations. For this reason a Russian interpreter is most desirable. The lectures, we are told, give a complete exposition of the judicial and military systems with a discussion of the subjects of personal liberties of Russian subjects. The volume should be well worth reading.

A significant illustration of the large and growing interest in stories of American life, which deal with men and women more or less familiar to the reader, is offered in the success of "J. Devlin, Boss," issued by the Lothrop Publishing company. The novel, which was published a little over three months ago, has sold heavily from the first. It has been on the list of the six best selling books in many cities, and is in greater demand today than at any time since its appearance. It is a love story with a political setting, and it has had as many women readers as men.

Two propositions have already been made for its dramatization. Among those who have written to the author, Francis Churchill Williams, and the publishers, of their personal interest in the story are Rear-Admiral Evans, Secy. of State Hay, D. D. Henderson, speaker of the House of Representatives, Senator Hawley, Irving Scott, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Governors Van Sant and Yates, Senator Daniel, of Virginia, Gertrude Atherton, Jacob K. Sloss, Ranssler, commander of the G. A. R., and Thomas E. Watson. The story is a stirring one, bringing into relief perhaps the most typical figure in American life, and not a few of our students in national history have a place in the book.

I prescribe it to children of all ages, and I recommend it to all in need and seeking relief from colds and coughs and bronchial affections. It is non-narcotic and safe in the hands of the most unskilled. A quick remedy for all mankind. Mrs. Mary R. Melendy, M. D., Ph. D., Chicago, Ill. This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

which will begin its serial run in Harper's Magazine next spring. Possibly no woman novelist of today writes in such an aggressive and yet at the same time wholesome manner. Mrs. Ward's last novel, "Eleanore," first made its appearance in Harper's in 1900.

Douglas Sladen, who is not unknown in American literary clubland, and is the author of one or two volumes of verse besides being a prolific contributor of brief fiction to the magazines, has completed an important book on Sicily, upon which he has been at work for three years. It is soon to be published, with 200 illustrations.

Cassell & Co. are about to publish Walter Crane's new work, entitled, "A Masque of Days," from the last essays of Elia, with forty full-page designs in color.

Foutney Bigelow will lecture at the University of Minnesota and elsewhere, not upon the relations between colonies and their mother countries, as was recently announced from London, but upon "The Relation of German Militarism to Civil Liberty."

MAGAZINES.

The Youth's Companion for this week has a clever story by its opening number entitled "Burger's Friend." In the "Stories of the Old Home Farm," C. A. Stephens has written an interesting tale, "The Night Before the Holiday," and "Paradise Re-opened" and "Red Bird's Adventure" are other pretty stories in the same issue. An important article, "Rationalism of Gladstone," is contributed by the Right Hon. James Bryce, M. P., and there are the usual number of excellent poems and anecdotes.

CONValescence.

Convalescence is sometimes merely apparent, not real, and especially is this true after such diseases as pneumonia, typhoid fever and the grip. To make it real and rapid, there is no other tonic so highly to be recommended as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

This great medicine cleanses and renews the blood, strengthens all the organs and functions, and restores health. Take Hood's.

Worms take refuge in the small intestine, where they can multiply. WORMS, CREAM VERMIFUGE will destroy these parasites. The verdict of the people tells plainly now well it has succeeded. Price, 25 cents. Z. C. M. I.

CONSUMPTION FORESTALLED

BY THE UNRIVALLED TISSUE BUILDER

Cured by Four Great Remedies.

Prevention of Consumption, early warfare with its germs, before the lungs have actually become involved in active ravages of the bacilli, can be successful only by use of means that render tissues sound and capable of resisting the disease germs which must always find lodgment and nourishment in order to set up their well known processes of destruction.

To thus forestall this enemy two properties must be possessed by the successful treatment,—one to protect the tissues, until they are made firm and strong, from germs that may be present, and one to restore the normal tone and resisting powers of weakened tissue cells.

The first of these properties is germicidal; the other is building or restorative. Predilection and actual consumption, also should learn that there is no remedy known to science which possesses the building and protective powers of the splendid Emulsion prepared in the great laboratories of Dr. Stearns in New York City.

This wonderful food remedy is the most potent to forestall consumption or any wasting disease; it builds the tissue beyond the power of germs to assault them and it holds all germs at bay while it builds.

In the matter of cure, the treatment of Dr. Stearns embraces four distinct preparations, including the wonderful Emulsion, and is positively unapproached by any other system in point of perfection of results.

The preventive and curative potency of the great Stearns system of treatment account largely for the fact that fewer than 40,000 graves were dug for consumptives in 1900 than in 1890 in the United States. The grand results of Dr. Stearns' treatment have been so extensive because he sent broadcast throughout the country, to threatened and actual subjects of consumption, his four great remedies free.

This free offer of all four remedies still stands. Don't let his liberality go unheeded. It will spare you the horrors of a consumptive's experience; it will rescue you from the monster evil's grasp.

The Emulsion is a great food remedy. The Expectant throws off poisonous waste and increases the breathing capacity by giving freedom to the lungs.

The Tonic is a powerful strengthener; not a stimulant.

The Osagui cure for Catarrh is a soothing local remedy. It instantly relieves the inflamed mucous membrane, placing it in a condition which leaves no fear of recurrence.

FOUR FREE REMEDIES.

To obtain these four FREE preparations that have never yet failed to cure, all you have to do is to write to

Dr. T. A. Stearns, 95 Pine St., New York, and his four great preparations will be sent you at once—FREE from his extensive laboratories, with full directions and instructions for their use.

Editor's Note—When writing the Doctor, please mention the Deseret News, giving express and postoffice address, and greatly oblige.
